

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

An audio amplifier generates an output to a load, in which a digital-to-analog converter drives the amplifier during powering up and powering down the amplifier. The digital-to-analog converter controls the amplifier to ramp the voltage at the output at a 5 predetermined rate to reduce rapid voltage changes from being sent to the load during the powering up or powering down sequence.